Description

The Kohlenbahnverein (coal railway association) invites you on a trip on its museum train from Meuselwitz to Regis-Breitingen, which is hauled by a diesel locomotive on this day.

After 1990 most of the old lignite industry installations in the region disappeared from the landscape. Operations on the industrial and siding railways in the Borna-Meuselwitz mining area also came to a complete standstill.

But the end of mining railway operations also brought together very different people, determined to preserve mining traditions and to keep the lignite industry's former key means of transport running as a museum and heritage railway.

Since then, thousands of people have enjoyed the shuttle service through an attractive post-mining landscape between Kammerforst and Auenholz, linking the small Thuringian town of Meuselwitz and Regis-Breitingen in Saxony, travelling in open wagons or in the stylishly furnished saloon car.

The association invites you on a Sunday trip on its museum trains in the footsteps of the lignite industry.
